How many times do we just close a window, a site or hit the ruthless 'Back' button because what we see repels us. Internet surfers don't have the patience to extricate information from a website that has a confusing layout and design. Often websites think that anything complex and convoluted is innovative and that sells best! Sure ingenuity is a plus, but the primary aim of a website is to reach out to a visitor, and if ingenuity comes in the way you will most probably lose your visitor.

Suffice to say, adequate and appropriate content does not translate into the perfect website. The design element is very important. Websites can easily lose traffic and potential customers because of difficulty in navigation. There are techniques by which your website can be user and search engine friendly. With search engine friendly web design, you are designing your website in such a way that search engines are able to locate it instantly.
