Fareham, United Kingdom, December 02, 2006 --(PR.com)-- Far too many UK residents are complaining after the fact that their partner's life insurance cover was insufficient. They are left with debts and mortgages to cover that are beyond their limits at a time when they should be free to mourn their loss. A new Internet service is being offered to residents of the UK so they can now have over a hundred quotes done at one time. It is the case that there are many individuals who do not have sufficient life insurance cover that will pay their debt liabilities. Imagine the effect this has on stay at home mothers who suddenly lose their husbands? Not only were their husbands the main income earners, but also their life partners. Having to find work, look after the children and grieve the loss is all too much for one person to have to handle and it is a common story. Anyone who hasn't recently reviewed their level of cover and policy premiums should do so as a matter of urgency.

Recently, in Exeter, a man aged forty-six lost his wife to breast cancer. It progressed very quickly and he never had time to stop and think about life insurance. They had four children together and he suddenly found himself unable to go to work because of home duties and looking after the two younger siblings. Everything seemed to landslide for him from there as the mortgage fell behind and he became increasingly depressed. His wife's life insurance had never seemed very important since she didn't work, but he had in no way considered the fact that he would have to leave work or pay for expensive day care arrangements. He now has two full time jobs to make ends meet and he does not have much time with his children. Do not let this be your story too!

There are so many insurance policies available on the market today, consumers are reporting confusion and misinformation. In the past it has been an ordeal to try to compare life insurance quotes, having to pass through countless voice recording systems and customer service operators. When you go to protected.co.uk, you can get over one hundred life insurance quotes in minutes. The Internet address is www.protected.co.uk, and any UK resident can utilise the service. It has been designed so it is very easy to use and compare the results.
