About Sam Gambino.

Sam Gambino was born and raised just outside of Detroit, Michigan. An avid collector of vintage advertising, he is fascinated with the styles and designs of the 1940s through the 1970s. Sam first gained an appreciation for '40s and '50s art as a child: "I was really fascinated with the title sequences of old Warner Brothers and Tex Avery cartoons. They were simple, yet stylish."

His artistic range eventually evolved into frequently drawing comic panels for King Features Syndicate's "New Breed" comic strip - some of which appeared on clothing and other accessories. He has also designed numerous ads which still appear in various trade publications, as well as the logo for "Wild for Outdoors", a hunting show featured on The Outdoor Channel. In addition, Gambino created "BuckStuds Stanley," the mascot for a line of hunting products by RDI, Inc.

On any given day, you can find him combing junk stores, thrift shops and flea markets. He seeks inspiration by collecting kitschy relics and old instructional books anywhere they can be found - as his studio and attic are littered with them. His art can be seen at www.samgambino.com
