Caldwell, NJ, July 21, 2007 --(PR.com)-- HungryFlix.com, an online distributor of digital content, is now offering independent movies and videos for the hot new Apple iPhone.

HungryFlix.com was the pioneer in providing indie films for portable media players such as the Apple iPod and Sony PSP. The web startup is also offering support for Apple TV, a network connected set-top box, and now the iPhone.

New users can register at <http://www.hungryflix.com> and automatically be entered to win a 40GB Apple TV device.

"The iPhone, and similar devices, will change mobile media forever," says HungryFlix.com CEO Brian Andrews. "The key factors with the iPhone are easy-of-use, a quality display, and the fact that for the first time people will have their media player with them at all times simply because it is their phone. The power of that statement can not be under estimated."

HungryFlix.com content is delivered as MPEG4 files that look and sound incredible on the iPhone's 3.5" high resolution display. All files are DRM-free so that users can also view the same movie on their computer, iPod or Apple TV device.

HungryFlix.com provides independent films, videos, music and more from across the globe. Content providers set their own price and share the profits from sales of their works.
