

WOW! Women On Writing Receives Truly Useful Site Award

Placentia, CA, October 02, 2007 --(PR.com)-- WOW! Women On Writing receives another award: Preditors & Editors' Truly Useful Site Award. WOW! is honored on a Preditors & Editors' Sites of Distinction page along with a link.

Preditors & Editors created awards for excellence. They state, "This is our way of encouraging others to strive for their best. These awards will be given out only once each month or not at all if no worthy sites are nominated." They continue to clarify the award's purpose: "Such sites should actually convey some useful information beyond mere submission guidelines or a list of products. Accurate marketing information, practical advice, active links to resources, and such are what truly help writers."

WOW! has received frequent compliments throughout the year highlighting how useful the ezine has become in the writing industry. WOW! contest winner, Laura Seltz, wrote, "thank you for the wonderful prize package you sent. You didn't only send 'things' -- you sent joy as well." Lissa Warren, Publicist, wrote, "Wow indeed. Women on Writing is an excellent source of information for writers--aspiring as well as established. And unlike so many sites these days, it has a personality."

WOW! is a global magazine that promotes the communication between women writers, authors, editors, literary agents, publishers and readers. Over the year WOW! has featured various in-depth profiles and interviews with industry professionals, such as author Amy Tan, literary agent Sandra Dijkstra, and aspiring writer/celebrity Tiffani Amber Thiessen, and celebrity Linda Wang.
