

New Book Bridges Gap Between Science and Religion

After a year of intense investigation of available evidence VandeWeghe found himself with not only his old degrees in engineering and economics, but also a new call to preach.

Seattle, WA, December 08, 2007 --(PR.com)-- Humbug, Rob VandeWeghe thought when his wife found a new passion: religion. To cool her off he renewed his old passion: science. Drawing upon his scientific and business background, VandeWeghe prepared to win the battle easily.

After a year of intense investigation of available evidence VandeWeghe found himself with not only his old degrees in engineering and economics, but also a new call to preach: "You can fool everybody but yourself, I just could not deny the truth."

Prepared to Answer [Windmill Ministries, 2007] is a wide-angle study of Christian apologetics that encompasses 33 chapters and 448 pages along with 587 footnotes and a wealth of figures, timelines, charts, and tables.

Of special interest are 16 Exhibits that propel readers into arcane areas such as astrobiology, molecular biology, DNA research, and genetics.

Technical scientific concerns are met head-on, but are discussed in simple terms that will be appreciated by specialists and laymen alike.

The book follows his personal odyssey from determined skeptic to committed Christian. Probe the darkest corners with him as he grapples with evidence for - and against - the resurrection of Jesus Christ, the inspiration of the Bible, and other foundations of Christian belief.

Compelling evidence has continued to mount up, and VandeWeghe created a web site to serve as a showcase of new resources and an arsenal of weapons for Christian apologetics. Visit him at www.windmillministries.org

Prepared to Answer is available in hard cover [$27.50], paperback [$17.50], and eBook download [$5.00]. For complete information, contact author Rob VandeWeghe at rob@windmillministries.org.
