

The Dead Pyates Society to Auction Title of Their Debut Album on Ebay

The Dead Pyrates Society are putting the naming rights to their debut album for sale on eBay. As veterans of the music world for nearly forty years, the Dead Pyrates have decided that it is time to release an independent record to celebrate their heritage as musicians.

Austin, TX, December 30, 2007 --(PR.com)-- As veterans of the music world for nearly forty years, the Dead Pyrates have decided that it is time to release an independent record to celebrate their heritage as musicians. This band was formed to pay their respects to a long list of friends and band mates that have lost their lives pursuing their dreams as artists in the world of music.

In order to release a project of this magnitude independently, the DPS are auctioning off the title of this Album to cover the cost that it takes to produce and promote a world wide project. The highest bidder on eBay will enjoy the success that the DPS create, along with the attention that will be brought to their name publicly. With decades spent shaping this project, the DPS is prepared to put their work in front of the world to display their creativity and emotion. This is an unforgettable opportunity that will carry on for many years and never be forgotten. This is a chance for someone to be a part of that legacy, and continue to celebrate the great musicians that have played a major role in music as we know it today.
