

Envirobidnet.com Continues to Grow, Expanding Services

Envirobidnet.com, the leading resource for obtaining government bid opportunities in the environmental field, announced today the expansion of their services to include new categories of bid notices, substantially broadening business opportunities for their customers.

Port Charlotte, FL, January 04, 2008 --(PR.com)-- Envirobidnet.com, the leading resource for obtaining government bid opportunities for the environmental industry including contracting, demolition, waste, engineering and analytical projects, continues to grow adding new categories of service.

“In the past year, we have added several new categories of service to include RFP notices for Developers, Landscape Architects, Commissioning Services, and SCADA Systems”, explains John Falcone, Envirobidnet.com Founder and President. “Local governments spend an average of $60 million dollars each year on environmental projects, and our service puts those opportunities right at our customers' fingertips.”

The on-line government bid notification service, founded in 1994, focuses exclusively on the environmental field, filtering relevant opportunities and delivering them to customers quickly and efficiently. Government bid opportunities for the private business sector represent tremendous organic growth opportunities. Offering the service, per state, for less than most people pay for a cup of coffee each day and a Free 30 Day Trial, Envirobidnet.com is an economical and no-nonsense business partner.

John Falcone adds, “In the near future we will continue to grow adding new value added services such as links to environmental lawyers, insurance companies, and sub-contractors, as well as help wanted ads and resume postings”.
