

"Animalia Angelicus" is Suggested to Cure Unrequited Love

Now available from Lulu.com is the heart-rending tale of an ancient and loyal bird, a rough feral cat, and a young silly dog sharing a lifetime's experience with a loving husband and wife, caring elderly grandparents, and a beloved child. Despite tragic misfortunes that befall upon a good and decent family, there is hope that an animal's eternal love can transcend even the finality of death.

Melbourne, FL, February 13, 2008 --(PR.com)-- Local author Larry Degala wrote his first work of fiction and published it on Lulu.com, the online marketplace for digital content just in time for this happy (or unhappy) occasion.

Larry Degala says, "Valentine's Day is almost here. Half the world has found their Valentine's. The other half not so. Sad and lonely persons should not panic. Valentine's Day will be back in another 356 days. And there are a lot of fish in the big ocean."

Also, there are other kinds of love-- love for family, for friends, for pets. And love for books. The author recommends a cure of one bowl of chicken soup and a copy of "Animalia Angelicus: A Romantic Tragedy from the Animal Kingdom." Larry Degala also adds, "Maybe a good tearjerker would help to shake all those tears out. And then the unhappy and lonely people can dry their cheeks, pick themselves up and start again. Tomorrow just might be their Lucky Day."

Jessica Carrol of Las Vegas, Nevada, comments: "As an animal owner, I have always wondered what my pets are thinking. It seems as if Degala is able to peer into the mind of the animals to be able to bring them to life as he does in Animalia Angelicus. While the novel is a bit violent in parts, it allows the reader to feel the devotion animals are capable of expressing for their loved ones. Animalia Angelicus is a must-read for those who believe animals are vital to human existence and possess a soul."

"Animalia Angelicus" will soon be going global, to be released in Dutch, French, German, Italian, Portuguese, and Spanish languages. After all, L-O-V-E is the universal language.
