

Vision Media Television Segment on Emergency Exit Lighting

New Program Scheduled for Internet and Public TV Documentary Series

Boca Raton, FL, March 16, 2008 --(PR.com)-- Vision Media Television announced today that they will produce a segment on “Emergency Exit Lighting” as part of their “The National Architectural Report Series” television program. “Our program will cover the most cutting-edge architectural issues, like this solution, which has gripped the American people since even before 911,” explained Mr. E. Miller. “The visibility of an exit in case of a disaster is of prime importance in order to reach safety” he added. Carmen Romeo, of Egress Marking Systems, said, “People are taught to get low in a fire but cannot find their way put. Even in a stairwell where the direction is known, people cannot move fast enough unless they have a pattern to follow.” Architecturally, placing a path marking marked near the floor to escape a disaster of any kind, is proven, important and should be part of the actual building code.

There will be several topics addressed on the series as a whole, and distinct programs will be distributed to public television, covering a wide spectrum of areas, such as High Performance Buildings, Safety, and The Dilemma of Inferior Technology Currently Being Used.

Our modern culture heaps an enormous amount of importance on safety in every situation from strength of design, to the visibility of “EXIT” signs. Now, The National Architectural Report Series will present the latest solutions, and their inspirations, to its viewing audience.
