Palm Beach, FL, April 29, 2008 --(PR.com)-- With the growing credit and housing crisis, many Americans have had many sleepless nights. Our two most sacred security blankets have been taken away.

"For most of our lives, we always knew that our homes would slowly grow in value and if we were careful, when we retired we would have a nice nest egg. Not since the Great Depression has ever lost huge values in their homes." said Steinhorn, Director of The Federal Banking Co-op

The Federal Foreclosure Assistance Center, was developed to help homeowners at risk, to either save their homes or to manage their financial loss and relocation expenses. The increase in the number of foreclosures has been staggering and homeowners are finding they need immediate assistance. To assist these folks, FedFac is recruiting local counselors to help these homeowners.
