The Rally Fighter is an important car in the automotive world as it is the first automobile to be successfully designed and built using crowd sourced design. In this case the crowd source design came in the form of an engineering contest on the internet put on by Local Motors of Arizona where the ideation of the crowd was contemplated and the best elements were implemented into the product seen today. Interestingly, the Rally Fighter incorporates all sorts of familiar and not so familiar elements which you can read about and discover on the Local Motors website.

The result is a street legal, off road monster that was designed and built to tame even the most demanding rally racing obstacles. What's more is that it achieves it in style much like the dealership it now calls home.
